Mission to Mexico

On a special "low profile," one-day mission to Mexico City, U.N. Ambassador Vernon Walters is expected to discuss with Mexican officials the worldwide U.S. diplomatic, legal and intelligence offensive against state-sponsored and condoned terrorism. President Reagan's charges of terrorism on the part of Cuba, Nicaragua, Iran, Libya and North Korea were given front-page display in Mexico City yesterday. The major newspaper, Excelsior, also juxtaposed a story from Rome in which Mehmet Ali Agca, the failed assassin of Pope John Paul II, testified that Oral Celik, a turk who has been implicated in the attack "is in Nicaragua participating in the international brigades." There are signs here that the Reagan administration's request for quiet intelligence support in its forthcoming anti-terrorist campaign will be "sympathetically received" by the Mexican government. . . . Meanwhile, Mexicans lined up by the thousands around the U.S. Embassy for travel visas to the United States. An embassy spokesman said, "Many Mexicans want to take their summer vacations in the United States before an inevitable devaluation of the peso makes vacations too expensive. The dollar now sells in banks for an official 243 pesos, but so-called 'superfree' rates for certain dollar buyers are as high 321 pesos and going up everyday."
